Slang words, generally, emerge and develop normally from explicit circumstances. The presence of new items, things, articles, thoughts or occasions is joined by new words to make sense of and portray them. Moreover, each new age of youngsters additionally needs another words to make sense of their different perspective on the existing earlier things. This different view reflects, in addition to other things, the changing social and authentic circumstance during which this age enters its time of youth. This brought into the adolescent shoptalk of the early XXI century such an enormous number of shoptalk words and articulations reflecting different parts of life..

So what is slang? Let's turn to the dictionary. Slang - this is a layer of vocabulary that does not coincide with the norm of literary language, words and expressions used by a particular social group. Such a group can be either quite narrow (rap musicians, chemical scientists, pickpockets, etc.) or very wide (teenagers, fans, those viewers). At a specific stage, some portion of the shoptalk words and articulations passes into the wide masses, becomes justifiable to everybody At the same time, they continue to remain non-literary for quite a long time, and therefore bold, informal, and highly emotional

Available resources of renewing youth slang is very differed. Slang doesn't stay consistent. With change one stylish peculiarity to another, old words are neglected, others come. This process is going exceptionally quick. In the event that in some other slang the word can exist for quite a long time, over the past decade of rapid world progress, an incredible number of words have appeared and gone down in history.

The first reason for the rapid emergence of new words in youth slang in the context of such a technological revolution is, of course, the rapid development of life.

Slangisms leak seriously into the language of the press. Practically all materials managing the existence of youngsters, their inclinations, occasions and icons contain slangisms in more noteworthy or lesser concentration. [1]

Adolescent speech is characterized by a "telegraphic style" that takes root through the advent of mobile phones with SMS service, e-mail and Internet chats. Because every younger generation wants to be different from both the "fathers" and the older young people, it introduces its own encoding of well-known concepts into its lexicon, as a result of which one can observe, for example, the transition from the used word body to the word bod. [2] Often one word or expression has a large number of slang synonyms that differ only emotional coloring. In American English such synonymous series can include up to fifty words. [3]

At the moment, in many countries of the world there is an intensive process of transformation of the living colloquial language, the essential point of which is the emergence of a new youth slang. In the formation of English youth slang, a significant role in the present the moment is played by the use of metaphors, symbolization. The most intensive word-formation process proceeds in such areas as nutrition and finance[4]

The widespread cycles of word arrangement are: improvement of discourse, getting from different dialects, the development of an exceptional "network language". The adolescent not just knows wellsprings of word arrangement in the young slang of the local dialects, yet additionally effectively utilizes them. To figure out how to talk youth slang, you want to gain the most well-known words and articulations from a word reference of slang or language, hear their elocution live.

Youth slang is a kind of lexicon based on the phonetics and grammar of the English language. Main its difference is colloquial, informal, often rude emotional coloring. Youth slang is most often found in such sections as "Man and his appearance", "Fashion clothes", "House, life", "Leisure". Big part of slang is all sorts of abbreviations and derivatives from them. A characteristic feature of youth slang is its mobility, which is explained by the change of generations.

According to S. V. Flexner, one of the authors of the Dictionary of English Slang, out of 600 thousand words of the English language approximately 45 thousand is slang. And in the lexical stock of the average statistical native speaker, which is from 10 to 20 thousand words, 2 thousand fall on the so-called buzzwords - buzzwords [5].

English slang is peculiar and unique. It was conceived and is born in the depths of the English language itself, in various social circles and age groups as a goal of speed, expressiveness, sometimes as a protest against a tedious or long word, similar to the desire to dedicate an object or its properties in its own way. In youth circles, where the creation of shopping is especially normal, except for everything else, the desire to separate from the universe of adults, "too much" their language, the double friendly place of youth, when they are never needed anymore. to be children, and "in adults" they are actually "not allowed", leads, on the one hand, to the arrangement of youth subcultures as friendly spaces, which accumulate equal in age, status, social status, occupation, as well as places where young people have an open door for self-realization and social work, and then, again, for them to develop their own language based on their main language, which they all speak. This peculiar youth language, youth slang, is mainly aimed at bringing "friends" closer and "strangers" moving away. At the same time, youth slang, used both by representatives of youth subcultures and by other, non-subcultural youth, fully reflects and verbalizes their existential carriers.

Youth slang is a series of words and expressions peculiar and often used by young people, but not perceived by "adults" as "good", common or literary. These words and expressions become slang not only due to their sometimes non-traditional spelling or word formation, but, first of all, because, firstly, their uses a more or less limited circle of people and, secondly, these words and expressions bring to the language special semantic connotation or "flavor".[6]

At the same time, youth slang is only one of the levels of the language. To know and use the terms of youth slang, you need to be, in fact, a literate person. This is not a contradiction. If you decide to learn English slang first and then grammar, you will look like ridiculous and ridiculous: to know, you don't know anything, but you swear like shoemaker. It is unlikely that you will command respect even among the youth. For them, it is their lifestyle. Slang is necessary also be a virtuoso. Therefore, first the grammar, and only then youth slang.
