Annotation: The foundations of upbringing are laid in the family. It is a school of life that nurtures all human relationships and children that should be formed in a child. The necessary opportunities will be created for them to acquire a profession according to their interests, to have a perfect knowledge of the rules of ethics and to follow them.

Key Words: The Child, upbringing, family, parents, respect, esteem, future society.

When we are born as a child, the first person we see in this bright world is our mother, that is, our parents. Our mothers take us into their bodies for nine months and bring us into the world. They wake us up at night and bring us up. They work tirelessly day and night to keep us alive, and they never complain about the cocktails they do. In this life, a person experiences all kinds of good days and happy moments. But the best blessing given to a person is the happiness of having children, that is, being a parent. With many similar qualities. Children is a follower, a descendant, a successor of this parent. Just as having the joys and pleasures of having a child, it has its own worries and hardships. Raising a child to be healthy, intelligent, educated and mature in all respects is a guarantee of a happy life in old age. It can lead to crimes such as theft, murder, gathering children around him with bad behavior in society.

Therefore, attention to the child is attention to the future. In order to bring up a child in a good way, the parents must first be mature. Every action taken in the eyes of the child affects his consciousness and upbringing. In this regard, Ibn Sina said, "There is nothing big or small in a family. Everything that seems simple, even family relationships, has a bad or good effect on a child. is one of the means of life in the development of the child. Our future, if we teach them to be honest, not to speak inappropriately, big or small, they will make us stand tall. They will honor and respect us more than we have cherished them.

Children should also honor and respect their parents while they are alive. The most exemplary of our traditions is the article: "Paradise is under the feet of mothers."

You see, upbringing can be learned from these little proverbs. Respect for parents In the works of the great thinker Alisher Navoi, for example, a great place is given to this issue. Our other scholars, such as Jami, Yusuf Khas Hajib, Al Bukhari Zamakhshari, Babur, Avloni, Behbudi and many others, have addressed this issue separately in their works. Therefore, respect for parents does not recognize the boundaries of time and space.

The literature of foreign writers pays special attention to this issue. In Shakespeare's King Lear, Balzac's Gorio Ota, and a number of plays, it is beautifully illustrated that respect for the father is not measured by anything. Mapassa's story "Sovach kampir" describes how powerful the mother's love is. If we look at a part of the world, a good upbringing and a good character will lead us to happiness. Abdullah Avloni also said, "Education is for us a matter of life or death or salvation, or destruction, or happiness or disaster." "Everyone gets two different educations. The former is nurtured by the parents by breaking down their own life experiences, and the latter, more importantly, is taught by life itself." Such wise sayings themselves emphasize the most important aspects of upbringing. Every parent gives his child a good upbringing, which allows him to show his beautiful qualities.
