Annotation: The idea that every society is based on its citizens, its family, the role of each citizen in society, the leadership of the rising generation and the crisis begins in the family, nothing can replace the upbringing and education in the family reported.

The role of the family in building the rule of law is invaluable. It requires all our citizens to strengthen their families, to educate each of its members, as well as our youth, to be loyal to their homeland.

The basis of any society is its citizens, its family. The power of the state is determined by the role of each citizen in society. Both the leadership and the crisis of the rising generation begin in the family. Nothing can replace the upbringing and education received in the family. The formation of an individual's legal culture in the family begins at a young age. One should not be indifferent to family discipline in shaping the legal culture.

Legal education of young people in the family is the starting point of the education system. The family environment is an important factor in shaping children's initial perceptions of the law. Young people are brought up first by their families. If the family environment is built on mutual respect, nobility and honesty, if the heads of families take their responsibilities seriously, good citizens will emerge from this cell of society.

Abu Ali ibn Sina, a great thinker of the Eastern Renaissance and an encyclopedic scholar, set very difficult and vital tasks for parents in his Mission and Address. If the head of the family is inexperienced, he will not be able to bring up the family members well and the result will be bad. "Bad upbringing in the family," he said, "can affect not only the family, but also other families around it."

As in all areas of education, legal education must have regularity and succession. Legal education should be carried out from a young age, because youth is characterized by the rapid formation of a person's worldview, self-awareness and understanding of values, the ability to independently evaluate moral, political, legal and other ideals. That is why everyone should pay attention to the educational work carried out in the family, in educational institutions, in public organizations, in work communities. It is important to ensure that children from an early age respect the rules and regulations of life. As the great thinker Abu Nasr al-Farabi said, whoever utters knowledge and wisdom, should start it from a young age, take care of his health, be moral and polite, keep his word, refrain from evil deeds, and stay away from betrayal, deceit and trickery. let him be pious and know all the rules of law, let him be knowledgeable and eloquent, let him respect the learned and the wise, let him not deprive himself of knowledge and the people of knowledge, let him acquire knowledge of all real material things.

In accordance with the Decree of the President of the Republic of Uzbekistan No. PF-1791 of June 25, 1997 "On improving legal education, raising the level of legal culture of the population, improving the system of training lawyers, improving the study of public opinion" Taking into account that the work on increasing the legal activity of members of the society, enriching the reforms with new content is one of the main directions of state policy, According to the decision of the Cabinet of Ministers of the Republic of Uzbekistan, the Center for Legal Awareness under the Tashkent State Law Institute and the Ministry of Justice of the Republic of Karakalpakstan, regional and Tashkent city khokimiyats 'Organize the lims and the Charter was approved.

According to him, the Center for Legal Advocacy has many tasks, including cooperation with public associations, law enforcement agencies and scientific institutions in the organizational and advocacy work to improve the legal culture and level of the population, the Republican "Spirituality and 'rifat »public center, trade unions, women's committee," Mahalla "foundation," Kamolot "youth social movement and other public associations recommended to increase.

Improving the legal culture of young people in civil society is the sole responsibility of government agencies. Ensuring the active participation of young people in non-governmental organizations, in turn, makes it necessary to constantly increase the level of their legal culture.

Trade unions, youth and women's organizations play an important role in raising the legal awareness and legal culture of young people. They are tasked with the effective use of various forms of legal education and legal training, strengthening the socio-political activity of young people. The role of citizens' self-government bodies, including mahalla institutions, in the implementation of the principle of universality of legal education and openness of legal information to all in the process of forming civil society is also invaluable. Therefore, the implementation of large-scale measures to improve the legal culture of young people in populated areas will undoubtedly yield the expected results. A wide range of explanations, interviews and lectures on the new legislation in the communities will help to increase the legal literacy of young people.

After gaining independence, which has had a significant impact on the spiritual and moral environment of each family, the upbringing of children, the neighborhood has gained official status as one of the most important links in a democratic state, becoming a subordinate governing body. Lawyer Z.Islamov assesses the role of the mahalla in the society as follows: it is also impossible. "

The characteristic of a neighborhood where a person lives all his life is that every family and individual living in it is formed in the eyes of this community. Community education is a process that is inextricably linked to community activities. The neighborhood, which is the closest branch of government to the population, should be a major center of education, spirituality and enlightenment among the youth.

Elements of legal education include specific means of influence. Nowadays, the use of oral, visual and advanced technical means in the formation of legal culture is becoming more effective. Radio, television, and various street advertisements have a special place in this. The role of the media is also important. His chances are huge. That is why the media has an important role to play in providing legal knowledge to young people in an understandable and convincing way. It is necessary to increase the role of the media as a mechanism for public control over the implementation of existing laws and regulations, the establishment of control over the activities of the state and officials. The media is actively working to shape the political, legal and economic consciousness of the people to protect the democratic values and concepts of our society.

This means that the role of the family, the community, the media, government and non-governmental organizations in raising the legal culture of young people is invaluable.
