Uzbekistan, which has a rich historical and cultural heritage, has begun to implement a new and ambitious development strategy, in addition to economic growth, which encompasses the all-round development of its citizens. This article, in turn, aims to study the integral role of this strategy in the formation of spiritually mature individuals. A multifaceted understanding of spiritual maturity, ethics, values, and self-awareness has been recognized as the cornerstone of building strong and enlightened societies.

We all know that in recent years, several decisions and decrees have been passed in our country on the development of the field of spirituality, which act as a pillar for the development of this field. In particular, the decision of the President of the Republic of Uzbekistan "On additional measures to increase the effectiveness of spiritual and educational work", "Measures to fundamentally improve the system of spiritual and educational work" "On the activities of has been serving for the output. . Drawing on psychological, philosophical and sociological perspectives, the article examines the various theoretical frameworks underpinning the concept. In addition, it examines international examples of nations that are incorporating spiritual development into their development agenda and provides valuable insights for Uzbekistan.

The main part of the article focuses on the results achieved in the development strategy of Uzbekistan. It explores the impact on educational systems, improving cultural and artistic expressions, and developing a community-oriented approach. Case studies and statistics are used to demonstrate the concrete results of these initiatives, emphasizing the connection between a spiritually mature population and the overall well-being of a nation.

The results section notes the positive changes observed in Uzbekistan, including increased levels of civic engagement, a greater sense of social responsibility, and a significant shift toward a more compassionate and empathetic society. Educational indicators, such as improved educational performance and increased enrollment in values-based programs, further demonstrate the strategy's success in educating spiritually mature individuals. Fostering spiritual maturity includes developing a sense of purpose, moral values, and personal growth. Here are some ways that development strategy can play a role in this context:

- Education and cultural development:
 - Incorporating moral and ethical education into the formal education system helps to inculcate values from an early age.
 - Promoting cultural awareness and appreciation of traditional values can contribute to a sense of identity and purpose.
 - Community Engagement:
 - Programs that encourage community involvement and volunteerism help people develop a sense of responsibility and compassion for others.
 - Support of public initiatives aimed at spiritual and moral development.
 - Health and Wellbeing:
 - Integrating mental health programs and stress reduction strategies into public health initiatives can contribute to emotional well-being.
 - Encourage practices such as mindfulness and meditation as part of a holistic health approach.
 - Cultural and religious tolerance:
 - Emphasizing tolerance and understanding between different cultural and religious groups can contribute to a more harmonious society.
 - Implementation of policies that protect religious freedom and encourage interfaith dialogue.
 - Art and Literature:
 - Support the creation and dissemination of art and literature that reflect positive values and spiritual themes.
 - Promote cultural activities that celebrate and preserve traditional art forms.
 - Youth Development Programs:
 - Invest in programs that empower and educate young people, equipping them with the tools to lead life with determination and a sense of purpose.
 - Offer mentoring programs to guide young people in their personal and spiritual development.
 - Encouraging ethical leadership:
 - Implement policies that support ethical leadership at all levels of society, including government, business and civil society.
 - Encourage leaders to be role models of moral and spiritual values.
- It is important to note that the success of such initiatives depends on effective implementation, public participation and continued commitment to these principles over time. In addition, the specific strategies adopted by Uzbekistan should fit the country's cultural and social context.

Conclusions and suggestions:

In short, the new development strategy of Uzbekistan has become important in improving the moral maturity of citizens. The inextricable connection between economic development and cultural-educational reforms created favorable conditions for the emergence of individuals who are not only economically efficient, but also morally and spiritually aware. This synthesis contributes to the overall development and stability of the country.

As Uzbekistan continues on its development path, it is suggested that ongoing efforts focus on improving educational programs, expanding cultural initiatives, and strengthening community engagement programs. In order to assess the long-term impact of the strategy on the spiritual development of the population, it is necessary to create continuous monitoring and evaluation mechanisms. In addition, international cooperation and knowledge sharing can provide valuable insights for further improvement. Uzbekistan can be an example for other countries that strive to create a harmonious balance between economic well-being and spiritual well-being, giving priority to the all-round development of its citizens.

Today's realities, the rapidly changing spiritual and political image of the world make the task of establishing a spiritual space built on the basis of science and enlightenment an urgent task of the day. To put this into practice, a spiritual generation armed with high spirituality, ethics and knowledge is needed. From this point of view, in order to develop the sector, to implement without deviation the tasks defined in the strategy of New Uzbekistan, in particular, to study and teach our spiritual heritage and values, which have historical foundations of several thousand years, and in this regard, various it is appropriate to implement innovative, popular projects.
