Relevance of the research. One of the main goals of the reforms currently being carried out in our education system is to ensure that the growing younger generation is fully developed and healthy in terms of mental, emotional, social, physical, and intellectual development. In the higher education system, it is also necessary to organize various educational and educational processes in order for students to become competitive and qualified personnel. This is because the process of students' education and upbringing continues to form a person. It is important to organize educational and educational processes on the basis of like-mindedness by keeping students informed about world news and establishing friendly relations with the youth of the world. Students form the professional and personal qualities necessary for themselves on the basis of these social relations. When interacting with representatives of different nationalities, it is necessary to respect representatives of other nationalities and religions, taking into account their religious and national values. At the same time, it should be noted that the development and formation of ethno-cultural tolerance in students is one of the important tasks. This requires that students have knowledge about concepts such as ethnic tolerance and ethnic origin.

Purpose of the study: To study the factors that influence the instillation of ethno-cultural tolerance in students.

Research results and discussion: Tolerance means respecting and learning about others, recognizing differences, overcoming cultural differences, rejecting unfair stereotypes, finding a common language and creating new connections. Tolerance is in many ways the opposite of prejudice.

What does the concept of tolerance include? What is tolerance?

Tolerance is the ability to accept without aggression the thoughts, actions, forms of expression and lifestyle of another person who are different from one's own. Tolerance originated in Western civilization at the religious level.

What is ethnic tolerance? Ethnic tolerance is the attitude of an individual, social group or society towards the acceptance of the "ethnic other".

An ethnic community is a stable group of people historically formed in a certain territory, having common features and characteristics, such as culture, language, self-awareness.

The main principles of tolerance are: namely, the principles of tolerance also include diversity as an enrichment, the ability to constructively resolve conflicts, and social responsibility in a democracy. Active tolerance does not mean giving up one's beliefs, but rather a willingness to cooperate, communicate, and cooperate.

What is an example of tolerance?

Example:

Personal tolerance is the expression of a person's acceptance of another person on an individual, sincere level. An example of this is two friends Jimmy and Tommy, whose musical styles are completely different. Jimmy still allows Tommy to listen to his music in the car, although he does not understand it.

In modern life, the concept of tolerance is vague and unstable, and its understanding differs in different peoples depending on their historical experience; Therefore, the concept of tolerance has very wide interpretations and expresses a variety of attitudes and moods.

In different cultures, tolerance defines and encompasses very different quality traits. For example, in English this term means "readiness and ability to perceive a person and a thing without disapproval", in Russian the closest meaning to the concept of "tolerance" is the term "patience", which means "ability, skill to endure, to put up with someone else's opinion. The vagueness of the concept of "tolerance" makes it rather abstract and general, and there is no strict definition for scientific research. Therefore, it is advisable to determine the appropriate indicators and criteria that would allow for a more accurate recording of the phenomenon under study.

It is important that the concept of tolerance itself is still being discussed and does not have a clear status.

Ethno-cultural tolerance should be developed on the basis of its main criteria, Emotional sensitivity (empathy); The positive component of empathy is the ability to help other people, support them and help them accept themselves.

The ability to reflect, internal dialogue; Communication with yourself is not just a conversation with your own thoughts, it is self-knowledge is the key to harmony and success. The presence of internal dialogue is a sign of mental maturity, because a spontaneous point of view arises only spontaneously, usually for children, internal dialogue appears at the age of 3;

Internal dialogue is a way to delve deeper into your feelings, understand your motives, develop self-awareness and find inner peace.

The ability to build constructive, positive relationships with people; Constructive behavior includes and reveals a person's ability to solve problems in social relationships, establish positive communication and actively participate in building a healthy society.

The development of the above-mentioned personality traits in students and young people develops the skills to build social relationships with people of different backgrounds in different situations and in different situations.

Conclusions and suggestions. Embodying high moral and ethical norms in students' personal characteristics and applying them in social relations is one of the current requirements. At the same time, it involves the formation of the personal characteristics of students. In terms of the importance of the degree of formation of the characteristics of ethno-cultural tolerance, the development and formation of the above factors is becoming more and more relevant.
