Introduction.

Impartiality is a great goal, a guarantee of our present and future. It should be noted that the task of the First President of the Republic of Uzbekistan IA Karimov "Uzbekistan is on the verge of achieving impartiality" shows how much prejudice is necessary for the great future of our country. will be. It should also be noted that due to the wine of impartiality, the level of economic growth in our country is growing and this situation is characterized by the international community.

The Constitution of the Republic of Uzbekistan is the legal guarantor of the legal and economic development of our country. Life itself now proves the correctness of the reforms being carried out in accordance with our model of economic development, which is fully in line with the requirements and rules of our Constitution.

After gaining its independence, our country has rightly chosen the evolutionary path of development, which is rightly called the "Uzbek module" in the world, which is alien to all kinds of economic leaps. It should be noted that the report of the First President of the Republic of Uzbekistan Islam Karimov in the joint session of the Legislative Chamber and the Senate of the Oliy Majlis of the Republic of Uzbekistan It was a big step in the development of the legal sphere of our country. This statement is aimed at further democratization of state power and governance in the country, reform of the judicial system, reform of the media, freedom of information and expression, reform of the electoral system in Uzbekistan. aimed at liberalization and deepening of the economy.

The rule of law and the strengthening of the rule of law, the reliable protection of human rights and freedoms are the main directions of the policy of our state today. On this basis, it is of particular importance to ensure the legal and statutory status of any person who is involved in a criminal case and who may be sentenced.

A crime is an offense that has its own characteristics. However, most forensic scientists and practitioners believe that "a crime has its own significant aspects, characteristics and signs, and other offenses have such elements, but the crime differs from them because the crime is related to other offenses." It is noted that.

Crime is distinguished from other offenses by its high level of public danger. In the description of crimes in criminal law, their objective and subjective features are taken into account. Such signs are also present in other branches of law (government, citizenship, duty, etc.). In order to distinguish such offenses from each other, it is necessary to have formal signs to determine their boundaries, and it is possible to find out which of these signs the person wants from criminal, administrative, civil or disciplinary offenses.

In turn, violent crimes, as noted above, are characterized by a high level of social danger.

The character of a person who commits a violent crime differs from the character of another person in such aspects as self-confidence, self-control, praise and high trust from those around him. However, such selfish qualities of minors who commit crimes with the help of violence have a group character. Among the characteristics of juvenile delinquency are the strong attachment to informal groups, the desire to demonstrate their criminal behavior, and the fact that other members of the group demand that their actions be enforced.

In cases of violence and criminality, the issue of criminality is of particular importance. However, these circumstances are significant only from a criminal point of view. From the point of view of crime prevention, the fact that no exchange allows you to commit crimes in a month, protection, use of modern security techniques, difficulty in entering the house or unhindered access to the premises, invasion of places of aggression, aggression and so on. islenivi etc.

Conclusion.

It is well-known that most violent crimes are committed in shelters. The importance of the place of crime in the search for violence in places of refuge is that the formation of the motive for the crime takes place through the assessment of the place of the crime by the perpetrator. At the same time, the issue of time is of particular importance in violent crimes. The importance of time in the prosecution of violence is that while some crimes are an element of the crime as a necessary feature of the qualification of the crime, from the point of view of the circumstances of the crime, it is difficult to understand the circumstances of the prosecution.
